* P R E F A C E.

THE following List of Monumental Brasses, which are in existence at the present time in our Norfolk churches, has been compiled from an examination of the rubbings made by me when collecting the materials for my work on The Church Heraldry of Norfolk. I am not so sanguine as to expect that the list is quite exhaustive, even though every brass has been verified by actual inspection, as recently as possible, and nothing taken on trust. There may be concealed, either by seats and matting, or hidden in the depths of some parish chest, treasures I have never seen, in that such things have come to light even in the last few months; but I venture to hope, after a comparison of my list with others, that I have not left much undiscovered, untraced, and unrecorded. For much that is of value in the list I am indebted to the kindness and indefatigable labour of my friend, the Rev. C. G. R. Birch, Rector of Brancaster. He has carefully examined the rubbing of every brass, and with his great knowledge of the subject, the annotations and corrections he has freely supplied must furnish a result of increased value to those who are interested in the search for, and study of, such relics of antiquity.

With regard to the arrangement of the list, the churches are placed in alphabetical order: in each church the effigial and subject brasses being given before the inscriptions, each class according to date; then follows a description of what still remains of each brass, as also of what is known to be lost. The date in Clarendon type is that of the engraving of the brass, usually also the date of decease. Every genealogical reference in the list, unless enclosed within a rectangular bracket, or authoritatively specified, is recorded on the brass. In most instances the position in the church is stated, as also the size of the effigy or inscription in inches.

For the illustration of the brass at Warham, I am indebted to Mr. J. B. T. Hales; for that at Barningham Winter, to Mr. C. J. W. Winter; and those at Wood Dalling, to General Bulwer: all the rest have been most generously presented by the Rev. C. G. R. Birch.

Subjects for illustration have been selected from those brasses which have not been already engraved in Cotman's work or elsewhere, and which, either from the remoteness of their situation have been hitherto little known, or which supply some useful illustration of costume or local workmanship.

Having before our eyes, in one view as it were, the brasses of the whole county, Mr. Birch and myself have been struck by many curious and interesting features apparent in the diverse types of local engraving, on which it is impossible to enlarge here, but which are distinctly traceable throughout the period when the manufacture of these memorials was evidently a source of profitable employment to many craftsmen probably resident in Norwich. Some of the more curious peculiarities are those noticeable in the work of an artist who at Warham All Saints', 1474, and Whissonsett, 1484, and c. 1485, has executed military effigies without the usual accompaniment of a sword, and also of another nearly contemporary, or perhaps the same, who, from about 1480 downwards, has represented ecclesiastics in the eucharistic vestment, shorn with unusual rigidity, but minus both stole and maniple, as at Ringstead, Sherington, St. Laurence and St. Etheldred, Norwich, Sparham, West Lynn, Wiveton, &c. Chalice and hosts, hearts with scrolls, and shrouded figures are all of a type peculiar to the county.

I shall still continue to look out for missing brasses, and trust that others interested in like manner will do the same, and then—should it be required—I will gladly bring out a second edition, which may possibly be exhaustive and complete.
